From the Commanding General, U.S. Military Assistance Command, Vietnam:

September marks your second birthday as well as your first anniversary in Vietnam. During the past twelve months, you have accepted the enemy's challenge; you have met him in battle and have defeated him. You have shown compassion for the innocent victims of his terror and aggression; you have opened your arms to his comrades willing to lay down their weapons and join the government's fight for freedom. In the midst of war and destruction you have found time to stop and to help rebuild.

In the finest tradition of the U.S. Army, you have emerged from a year's baptism of fire as a competent, effective and seasoned fighting force. Since you were organized as the first separate light infantry brigade, you have met and exceeded expectations. I know of no other unit that has accomplished more in a shorter time.

The months and perhaps years that lie ahead will continue to test your courage, professionalism, and resolve. You know the enemy we fight; he is evasive, he is tough and he is determined. He has shown no sign of abandoning his goal of conquering the Republic of Vietnam. During the coming year you will continue to be called upon to help deny the enemy any success.

The history of your unit will record your response. You have written an outstanding opening chapter and I have no doubt but that succeeding chapters will attest to increasing determination, skill, and courage.

BG FRANK H. LINNELL
CG May 1967—

To the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the 196th Light Infantry Brigade, I congratulate all of you upon the completion of the Brigade's first year of combat in Vietnam.

There are some missing in our ranks now—due to the infusion program and battle losses. Many remain who disembarked from the USNS Patch and Darby in July of 1966 and can recall the beginning of their military careers in September of 1965 and the training at Fort Devens, Camp Edwards, and Camp Drum. They have the responsibility now to instill in the new arrivals the fighting spirit inherent in the Brigade's motto: "Ahead of the Rest."

Since joining the Brigade in November 1966, I have been tremendously proud to observe the improvements, accomplishments and successes of the 196th Light Infantry Brigade in such operations as ATTLEBORO, CEDAR FALLS, GADSDEN, and JUNCTION CITY I and II. It was with a great sense of pride that I read in the newspapers and magazines the terms used to describe the Brigade: "Crack Army troops of the 196th Light Infantry Brigade move from Tay Ninh to Chu Lai."

As personnel complete their tours and depart for the United States, they leave behind them an outstanding record of achievement that will be an inspiration to all who follow in their footsteps.

The History and Heritage of a unit is only as good as the men who make up that unit. What is contained in this yearbook is a pictorial review of your achievements since the activation of the Army's first Light Infantry Brigade on 15 September 1965 at Fort Devens, Massachusetts.

It is a History—your History—which documents the accomplishments of the "Charger Brigade" in its assistance to the oppressed people of South Vietnam.

It is a Heritage—your Heritage—which you leave to others through your feats during Operations ATTLEBORO, CEDAR FALLS, GADSDEN, and JUNCTION CITY I and II.

You can be proud of the "The Second Year" because you have kept "Ahead of the Rest" and have earned the distinction of being one of the finest combat units in the Republic of Vietnam. BG FRANK H. LINNELL

For the first year following its activation, the 196th Light Infantry Brigade knew but one commander, COL Francis S. Conaty, Jr. COL Conaty commanded the Brigade until its arrival in Vietnam, at which time he relinquished command to BG Edward H. deSaussure. Later, BG Richard T. Knowles assumed command and led the Brigade through the greater part of the "Second Year". BG Frank H. Linnell is the present commander.

The "Most Televised War" is how some have described the present strife in the Republic of Vietnam. Never before has the American public—the world—been able to witness close up the daily activities of the American soldier and his Allies.

His joys, his heartaches, his sorrows are all nakedly visible to people he cannot see. For this is a new kind of war. A war in which new rules are written and old ones are altered or discarded.

For him, there is no flicking off the machine, or the changing of channels for something more soothing. His is the day to day confrontation with life at its most basic level—Survival!

He may walk for several thousand meters, up hills, through swamps, through brush that scrapes and tears at his clothing until blood seeps from his scratched skin. Through all of this he is alert for the enemy who is a master in the art of guerrilla warfare.

A cold beer or coke, a hot meal or a shower, a letter from home, are the simple luxuries he cherishes and misses.

Yet, in no other war has the American soldier—the kid on the block, the teacher, the boy from the farm—proven himself the kind of man that can stand up to the demands of this new kind of war.

Every day he is a statesman who greets the Vietnamese with a wave of the hand, and pats the kids on the head, and gives them candy. He helps to build schools and homes, and guards the villagers from Viet Cong tax collectors and terrorist goon squads.

As a fighter he was never better. The daily accounts of news media give graphic examples of his ability to withstand bitter pressures and overcome great odds. For this war has shown the American soldier better prepared, both mentally and physically, to cope with the new problems. He has more confidence in his equipment, his fellow soldier, and himself. Most of all, he has proven himself a dedicated individual more aware of the principles for which he is fighting.

THE MOST "TELEVISED WAR"

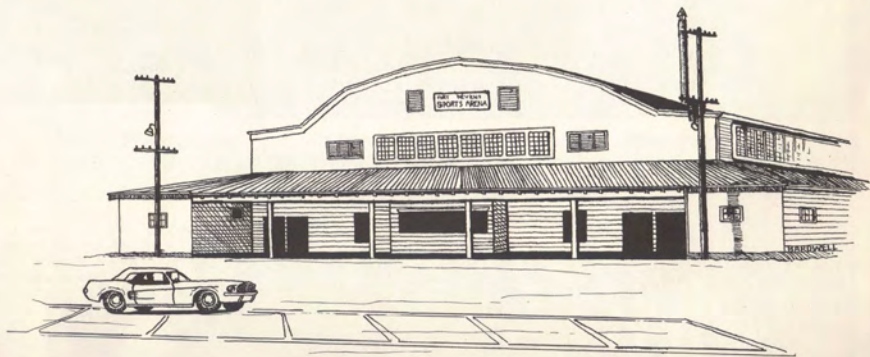

FORT DEVENS

ORGANIZED

The 196th Light Infantry Brigade was activated at Fort Devens, Mass., on 1 Sept 1965. Then under the command of Colonel Francis S. Conaty, Jr., the brigade was organized as a highly mobile, quick-reaction force capable of independent, sustained operations against guerrilla-type forces.

Comprising the brigade were three infantry battalions: 2d Battalion, 1st Infantry; 3d Battalion, 21st Infantry; and the 4th Battalion, 31st Infantry; an artillery battalion, the 3d Battalion, 82d Artillery; a support battalion, the 8th Support Battalion (8th Spt); and three separate companies. The separate companies were Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 196th Light Infantry Brigade; Troop F, 17th Armored Cavalry; and the 175th Engineer Company (Combat).

FORT DEVENS

The countryside surrounding Fort Devens and the land on which it now stands has supported combat troops for more than 300 years.

From 1636 to 1676 a company of Dragoons, soldiers who were loyal to the British Crown as well as their adopted home in New England, were garrisoned on a site near the main gate of Devens.

From the days of the colonists to the Korean War, Fort Devens was home for thousands of troops during wartime eras. Units were formed, reactivated, trained, and retrained on the sprawling complex.

Three hundred years later, the ground at Devens echoed to the footsteps of the 196th Light Infantry Brigade.

A small nucleus of experienced soldiers, many of whom were combat veterans, were mixed with 2,000 draftees to form a combat fighting machine reminiscent of the traditional New England "Minute Man Brigade". From infancy to combat readiness Fort Devens was home for the men of the "Charger" Brigade.

Although the men of the 196th are now stationed in Vietnam, they shared in the same traditions of their forefathers who passed through Fort Devens in years past.

DEPLOYMENT

Upon its receipt of change of destination orders, the brigade's 12-day enroute schooling to the Dominican Republic was enlarged to cover a 30-day period oriented to operations in Vietnam.

A training outline was prepared with particular emphasis on situations to be encountered in the Republic of Vietnam. Where possible, Vietnam returnees were assigned as instructors on tactics peculiar to that Asian Republic.

Additionally, special classes were presented to the officers and non-commissioned officers on lessons learned, tailored to the small unit leader in a counterinsurgency role.

Artillery units conducted training in forward observer (FO) procedures, fire direction center (FDC) operations, and counter-mortar techniques. Infantry companies studied patrolling, mines and booby traps, ambushes, personal hygiene, care and cleaning of weapons and equipment, and communications. Particular emphasis was placed on physical conditioning.

An advance planning group of the Brigade left Fort Devens for Vietnam on 9 July 1966. It arrived in Saigon on 12 July. The group learned that the brigade's new home was to be located outside the city of Tay Ninh, some 65 miles northwest of Saigon, in the Vietnamese III Corps area. By 15 Aug, the main body of the brigade had arrived in Vietnam. Five days later, elements of the brigade were attached for combat operations, to the 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division, which was operating in the Tay Ninh area.

Tay Ninh, one of the more affluent provinces in the Republic of Vietnam, yet one of the more threatened by the Viet Cong, was now home for the Chargers of the Army's first Light Infantry Brigade.

Gen De Saussure addresses the people of Tay Ninh on the brigade's arrival

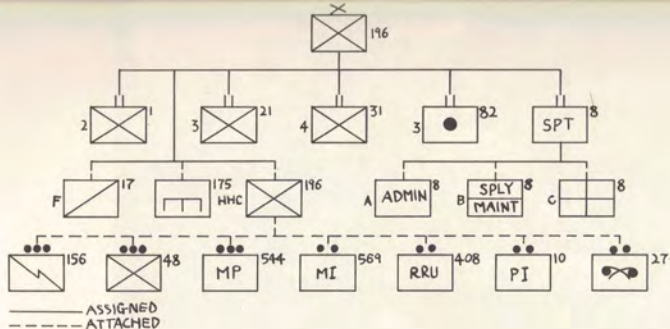

When the brigade arrived at the location selected as its base camp, the men could hardly believe what they saw. Before them lay acres of wasteland pock mocked with gigantic, rock-hard anthills and matted with elephant grass and scrub trees. For some, the panorama of land before them was as expected. For most, the realization came difficult, particularly after the tiring trip from Boston to Vung Tau to Tay Ninh which forced upon them dreams of a hot meal and lots of sleep.

Work began immediately. The men pitched their shelters and bent to the task of building a new home.

Through day and night, the men toiled. It was hot, but the rains made things worse. In time, the land took on a new look. It became home.

With the attachment in-country of several small, specialized units (diagram at left), the Brigade's capability to conduct independent sustained combat operations was greatly enhanced.

Since the Brigade arrived in-country in mid-August, the remainder of the month was spent primarily on base camp construction and securing the outer perimeter. There were, however, 20 small unit actions conducted at the platoon and company level with no significant enemy contact.

Battalion size combat operations commenced on 2 Sept 1966 with Operation ALICE by the 3d Battalion, 21st Infantry (3/21 Inf). The operation was characterized by heavy saturation patrolling at night and vigorous company size search and destroy operations during the day. The operation proved successful in that it disrupted the activities of the Viet Cong C-40 Company which was known to be operating in that area.

The 4th Battalion, 31st Infantry (4/31 Inf), with C Battery, 3d Battalion, 82d Artillery (3/82 Arty) attached, commenced operation ATHOL on 8 Sept 1966. The battalion was airlifted to Dau Tieng where they established a strong defensive position to reinforce Vietnamese Army units and to protect U.S. artillery in the area. During the five days they were committed, the battalion conducted three search and destroy operations in the southwest portion of the Michelin Rubber Plantation. Although no significant enemy contact was made, a great deal of experience was gained in operational resupply and air movement procedures.

On 27 Sept, the 2d Battalion, 1st Infantry (2/1 Inf), with part of A Btry, 3/82 Arty attached, was airlifted to Dau Tieng to support the 25th Infantry Division's Operation KAMUELA. The battalion's mission was to secure and evacuate an enemy rice cache located in the upper Boi Loi Woods. The unit made light enemy contact while conducting search and destroy operations. During the period, 216.25 tons of rice were evacuated.

ATTLEBORO

Prior to Operation ATTBORO, intelligence indicated that the area selected for the operation was one of the largest logistical storage and shipping establishments for the Viet Cong (VC).

The area was characterized by both low lying flat terrain with cultivated fields to heavily forested double and triple canopy jungle. Several dirt roads and trails entered the area from a nearby rubber plantation, running east to west to the Saigon river.

The 196th Light Infantry Brigade's 2/1 Inf commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Charles E. Weddle, was given the mission to conduct search and destroy operations in the selected area of operation.

The first elements from the battalion departed the Tay Ninh base camp on 17 Oct and by 19 Oct all troops, equipment and initial supplies were in the area.

The search and destroy operations from 20 thru 28 Oct was characterized by limited enemy contact and the finding of numerous structures, construction materials, boats, food products, punji pits, ammunition, tunnels, and documents. A hospital complex consisting of 27 structures above and below ground was also found. The structures above ground were 30 feet long and 20 feet wide, while those underground were 12 feet long. Medical supplies, clothing, rice, salt, milk and peanuts were in the complex.

Orders were issued to the battalion 28 Oct to airlift one company to an area approximately six miles northwest of Dau Tieng to secure and search an area in that vicinity. Within four hours after landing in the area on 29 Oct, Company A had uncovered more than 200 tons of rice, 440 gallons of gasoline and 10 tons of salt. Companies B and C were airlifted to link up with Company A that afternoon, and as the amount of captured supplies and materials increased, elements from the brigade's 8th Support Battalion were brought in to assist in the evacuation.

Enemy contact during the next four days remained light and the amount of captured equipment, supplies, weapons and ammunition increased. In less than five days the battalion had captured more than 820 tons of rice, 1600 can of milk, 25 tons of salt and more than 1200 pounds of fish along with smaller quantities of other supplies and equipment.

The operation increased to multi-battalion size on 1 Nov, when the 4/31 Inf was committed to search an area north of the rice cache and the 25th Division's 1st Battalion, 27th Infantry (1/27 Inf), attached to the brigade, was moved to Dau Tieng as a reaction force.

On 3 Nov, elements from the 1/27 Inf received orders to establish blocking positions approximately six kilometers north of the area of operation while 2/1 Inf, and 4/31 Inf moved north to designated objectives. Company B, 1/27 Inf received automatic weapons fire immediately upon reaching its landing zone (LZ 1). A second company was committed to this area. After moving approximately two kilometers towards their objective contact was made with an unknown size enemy force.

Enemy forces in the vicinity of LZ 1 were estimated to be at least two companies with which Company C, 1/27 Inf, had made contact. Elements from 3/21 Inf, and 2/1 Inf, were committed to this area. Fierce fighting continued throughout the night.

The next morning (4 Nov) elements of 4/31 Inf, uncovered approximately 120 tons of rice northeast of the area where the battle was still being fought. Additional elements from 2/27 Inf, and 4/31 Inf, were airlifted to the area of heavy fighting. Large scale assaults were initiated by the VC and the enemy was fighting from well entrenched and fortified positions. The enemy was well armed, equipped, trained and disciplined.

Large scale attacks (60 to 100

VC) continued against 1/27 Inf on the morning of 5 Nov. These charges were repeatedly repelled.

Company C, 2/27 Inf became separated from friendly forces the previous night (4 Nov) and was trapped by enemy forces. Company A, 2/1 Inf, moving south through thick jungle made contact with Company C. Fighting their way out, Company A brought out the trapped company along with friendly casualties.

The following morning artillery and air strikes pounded the enemy bunkers. This was followed by a sweep of the area by 3/21 Inf, and possession of the heavily contested area.

As the tempo of the battle increased, the brigade was attached to the 1st Infantry Division, effective 9 a.m. 6 Nov.

CEDAR FALLS

CEDAR FALLS, the massive allied push in areas long considered Viet Cong strongholds, was aimed at destroying the Viet Cong Military Region IV. This enemy headquarters controlled the activities of the 165th A Regiment and all VC political activities in its area which included Gia Dinh Province and part of Hau Nghia and Binh Duong provinces. The destruction of MR IV was considered vital as it was the headquarters responsible for the VC activities in and around Saigon.

The area of operations (AO) for CEDAR FALLS encompassed the Filhol Plantation, Ho Bo Woods, Boi Loi Woods, Iron Triangle and the Long Nguyen Secret Zone of Hau Nghia, Binh Duong and Tay Ninh Provinces.

The entire AO was well covered with trenches, foxholes, automatic weapons positions and other VC fortifications with the Ho Bo Woods containing the most extensive networks.

The area of operations of the 196th Light Infantry Brigade included the Ho Bo Woods and a portion of the Boi Loi Woods. Preliminary reports indicated that the 1st and 7th Battalions of the VC 165th A Regiment were located in the brigade AO. Both of these units were considered to be well armed with such anti-tank weapons as the 57 mm and 75 mm recoilless rifles and the RPG-2 rocket launcher. The area was believed to contain a high percentage of antitank and anti-personnel mines and booby traps.

The brigade kicked off phase one of its part in the operation on 5 Jan with the movement of the brigade forward command post to the Trung Lap Vietnamese Ranger training camp. While securing the road to Trung Lap for brigade headquarters, the third platoon of Troop F, 17th Cavalry, came under a vicious VC surprise attack. Light friendly casualties resulted as the VC employed mortars and automatic weapons fire.

For the next two days brigade units jockeyed into their assigned positions, with the attached mechanized and armored units—1st Battalion, 5th Mechanized Infantry (1/5 Mech); 2d Battalion, 22d Mechanized Infantry (2/22 Mech); and Troop B, 3d Squadron, 4th Armored Cavalry (3/4 Cav)—playing key roles in securing landing zones for the infantry.

2/22 Mech while moving to its objective observed five VC running. Company B engaged the enemy, killing one and capturing another. The company also confiscated five tons of rice, and 88 rounds of M-1 rifle ammunition. A short while later, Company C observed two more VC running. After a short chase, the battalion added two more detainees.

On 7 Jan, 3/4 Cav engaged 10-15 VC with the main gun of their tanks, resulting in three VC KIA. These were the first VC engaged who were attempting to flee the Iron Triangle by way of the Saigon River. The blocking positions held by the brigade to seal off their portion of the notorious Iron Triangle had begun to pay off.

Troop F, 17th Cav, also scored that day. Acting on information that a VC force had kidnapped a civilian, the troop sent an element to investigate. A reinforced VC squad was encountered enroute and Troop F killed four of the enemy and captured four claymore mines.

From then on, contact with the enemy came at a fast pace. Nearly all units reported engagements with the enemy, killing several of them and capturing numerous weapons, stores and documents.

On the morning of 9 Jan, Company B of 2/1 Inf found several VC documents in a bunker. The majority of these documents referred to the postal, communications and transportation sections of MR IV. Later that afternoon, 2/22 Mech and 3/4 Cav reported killing a total of 15 VC. The nine VC killed by 2/22 Mech were attempting to cross the Saigon River. Again more indication the communists were fleeing the allied push in the Iron Triangle.

The following day, brigade units conducting search and destroy missions from their blocking positions along the Saigon River reported killing 25 VC in separate engagements. Most of the VC killed were in sampans trying to cross the watery obstacle. Company C, 3/21 Inf, killed three who were not in sampans. The VC were concealed in spider holes when the company came through a village to clear it. In the ensuing fire fight, the Americans suffered only two wounded.

It was plainly evident now the enemy was on the run. The Allied blitz through the notorious Iron Triangle was forcing the enemy to flee across the Saigon River with anything they could get their hands on. Some were fortunate to have sampans. Others used logs and makeshift rafts. Still others swam. But they were all unfortunate. They met the devastating firepower of the 196th Brigade and its supporting units long before they reached the bank they thought would lead to escape and survival.

By 17 Jan, the brigade had taken a high toll of the enemy—130 enemy killed as compared to six Americans killed in action. The brigade also captured eight, one of which was a major who claimed to be an executive officer of rear service agencies of MR IV. There was also one rallier, or "Hoi Chanh", who said he was the head of a four-man tax collection and propaganda cell.

On 18 Jan, the biggest find of the operation was made. Late in the afternoon, Company A, 1/5 Mech, discovered an extensive tunnel complex. In it were found some 40 pounds of documents which included detailed maps of the Saigon and the sprawling Tan Son Nhut area, maps showing the schemes of maneuver of friendly operations in the area, and VC routes of movement from the Iron Triangle to the Saigon River. It was a find beyond comparison. The documents were the key to the VC acts of terrorism and violence in the South Vietnamese capital and its surrounding areas. It was a loss the enemy could not afford.

Operation CEDAR FALLS continued for seven more days. It was seven more days of greater losses for the VC. The enemy was hurt and his longtime stronghold and sanctuary—the Iron Triangle—ceased to be.

The operation added greatly to the Allied intelligence agencies concerning MR IV, the 165th A Regiment and VC guerrilla activities in Hau Nghia and Binh Duong Provinces. The presence of U.S. troops in the operational area for an extended period of time (21 days), coupled with the ferocity of U.S. firepower, completely disrupted VC activities and disorganized VC units.

GADSDEN

The brigade's mission in Operation GADSDEN was to attack in zone to find, fix, and destroy Viet Cong and North Vietnamese Army forces and installations, and to block infiltration routes across the Cambodian border during the TET truce period.

The area of operations was characterized by flat, dry terrain and single-canopied jungle. In general it favored the use of mechanized units. The major obstacle in the area was the Rach Ben Da River. This was overcome by the brigade's 175th Engineer Company which for the first time in the Vietnam War, emplaced a light tactical bridge in a combat situation. Army aviation played a key role in the success of this operation as giant Chinook helicopters ferried the engineers and their equipment to the bridge site.

Another first for the brigade in GADSDEN, was the first large-scale use of its newly attached 48th Infantry Platoon (Scout Dog). Employed at the company level, the dogs were effective on patrols and as point elements during movement. Their keen senses and good training paid off in detecting Viet Cong long before their human masters.

Operation GADSDEN began 1 Feb with the positioning of brigade units to their forward locations. By 3 Feb search and destroy operations had begun.

First to make contact with the enemy was the attached 1/5 Mech. Its mission then, was to move from objective 2, the site of the bridge erected by the engineers, to objective

4. Contact was made twice in the morning, but with negative results.

But by 1330 enemy activity had increased, and the battalion now found itself opposing an enemy force armed with recoilless rifles. At one point, an armored personnel carrier of the reconnaissance platoon was surrounded and temporarily overrun by the Viet Cong.

Significant enemy contact was made again by 1/5 Mech on 5 Feb. Company A, the lead element of the battalion's push to objective 6, engaged a VC force of unknown size and began receiving rocket, rifle grenade and small arms fire. Two APCs were hit by rocket fire and one by a mine. Four hours later the battle ended. The Americans suffered two killed and one APC destroyed. The enemy lost 15 dead and an assortment of weapons and documents captured, among them a heavy machine gun and a grenade launcher.

On 7 Feb, Company A engaged an enemy force wearing khaki uniforms and armed with small arms and rifle grenades. Helicopter gunships were called in and the enemy withdrew. A half hour later, the enemy reappeared only to see Air Force jets screaming in on them. As a result the enemy lost 20 killed by air and one killed by friendly ground fire.

On 8 Feb, the four-day TET truce period began. Brigade units improved defensive positions, held training, and maintained an increased state of security and surveillance in their zones. Local patrols commenced with strict orders to abide by the rules governing the TET truce period; not to shoot unless first fired upon by the enemy. Yet, at the end of the first day of the truce, brigade units were fired upon on three occasions resulting in two American wounded and one VC KIA.

On the third day of the truce, friendly forces again received enemy fire but with no casualties. Enemy fire consisted of hand and rifle grenades. In all instances fire was returned on the enemy with unknown results.

At 0700 hours 12 Feb the truce was over. From then until the 16th, contact with the enemy was light but brigade units continued to find enemy documents and stores. By the 17th, all brigade units had returned to base camp at Tay Ninh.

An air assault by 3/21 Inf on 18 Feb uncovered a VC base camp. The following day, Company B received fire from a squad of VC. The VC employed small arms, automatic weapons and a 60 mm mortar. Artillery and air strikes were called in on the enemy which withdrew to the west. The enemy lost three dead in the fire fight.

On 21 Feb, the operation was terminated.

Operation GADSDEN confirmed the location of elements of the Viet Cong 271st Regiment, the 680th Training Regiment, the 70th Security Regiment and rear services elements in northern War Zone C, which previously were not confirmed.

The VC reaction to major U.S. operations was an apparent negative desire to engage the Free World Forces in strength. The VC encountered were either small delaying forces, reconnaissance elements or misoriented exfiltration groups.

Though the role of the straight infantry in this operation could hardly be minimized, the mechanized infantry, with its armor and increased fire power, proved to be most successful.

JUNCTION CITY

With valuable knowledge gained in Operation GADSDEN, the brigade soon found itself in a larger operation in generally the same area. This operation was termed JUNCTION CITY and was to be the biggest Allied offensive of the war at that time.

The area of operations for JUNCTION CITY had long been considered a VC "safe" haven which contained numerous base areas, hospital facilities, training sites and supply facilities. The Central Office of South Vietnam (COSVN), the controlling headquarters for all communist political and military activities, was known to have agencies within the area. VC forces in the area were estimated to be elements of four infantry regiments and an artillery battalion.

Opposing this formidable force were elements of three U.S. Divisions, two separate brigades, an armored cavalry regiment, and a force of Vietnamese Marines.

Phase 1 of JUNCTION CITY began with the strategic positioning of Allied forces into a "horseshoe" blocking position. To the west, the 3d Brigade of the 4th Infantry Division; to the east, elements of the 1st Infantry Division; to the northeast, the 173d Airborne Brigade; and to the northwest in an area considered critical, was the 196th Light Infantry Brigade. The mechanized units were to sweep up from the south into the horseshoe, killing or capturing all VC in the area, or forcing them into the units pre-positioned.

The brigade jumped off for its objectives on 22 Feb. 2/1 Inf was airlifted into the southernmost objective, Fire Support Base (FSB) MUSTANG; 3/21 Inf into FSB PANTHER; and 4/31 Inf into the northernmost objective, FSB COUGAR. With 3/21 Inf were Batteries A and C, 3/82 Arty. Battery B, 3/82 Arty was positioned in FSB Mustang.

As the infantry units assaulted their objectives enemy fire rang out. FSB PANTHER became the hottest as the infantrymen were met by VC automatic weapons fire causing three U.S. casualties. FSB COUGAR, which was expected to be the hottest received only minor sniper fire, while at FSB MUSTANG enemy fire was sporadic.

The following day 2/1 Inf found a fresh VC base camp with structures, bunkers and punji pits. This was determined to be a VC training camp. In the same area they found numerous trails, additional structures, and a U.S. shotgun. Company A, 4/31 Inf, found 18 bunkers, 6 huts, and 32 spider holes, all of which were destroyed.

On 24 Feb, 4/31 Inf moved to secure an LZ for the Vietnamese Marine Task Force ALPHA. The task force landed and began sweeping south to link up with the advancing armored cavalry.

From 24 to 27 Feb, brigade units continued to conduct extensive search and destroy operations, making contact with the enemy on many occasions. On 28 Feb, an airstrip at the 3/21 FSB PANTHER was completed and officially named "Gimlet International Airport." An Air Force "Caribou" made a successful landing and takeoff from the airstrip which was literally cut from the jungle by the "Gimlets."

In the afternoon of the 28th, Company C, 4/31 Inf, moved into the edge of a VC base camp and immediately drew automatic weapons fire from the enemy. The company pulled back to call in artillery. When they moved back in, again they were taken under fire. The infantrymen assaulted and the enemy broke contact. The VC suffered nine dead.

On 14 March, the brigade commenced Phase II of JUNCTION CITY when 4/31 Inf returned to brigade control. From 12 to 14 March, the battalion had been under the operational control of the 3d Brigade, 1st Infantry Division, and was utilized to secure the Special Forces camp at Prek Klok and French Fort. The brigade conducted extensive search and destroy operations, secured the Prek Klok Special Forces camp, and set up blocking positions in conjunction with a sweep by 3d Brigade, 4th Infantry Division. The brigade and its attachments remained in this area until March 28 when it commenced the "mobile brigade concept."

From 28 March until 7 April, the brigade conducted extensive search and destroy operations in the northern portion of War Zone C. Moving every three to five days the brigade succeeded in denying the Viet Cong access to this area. On 7 April, the brigade was alerted for movement to Chu Lai. On 8 April all elements of the brigade had closed Tay Ninh base camp.

Operation JUNCTION CITY Phase II was officially terminated for the brigade on 9 April.

For the brigade, Operation JUNCTION CITY was a success. During Phase II of the operation the brigade tried and successfully proved the value of the "mobile brigade" concept.

The concept called for a light, mobile brigade with the capability of conducting rapid assaults on presclected targets and with the ability to provide quick reaction forces on short notice to exploit current intelligence on the enemy. During JUNCTION CITY, the brigade, time and again, proved its ability to kill, capture and destroy enemy forces, denying him freedom of movement and destroying his fixed installations and fortifications. By remaining in an area no longer than three to five days, unless enemy contact warranted further exploitation of an area, the brigade was able to keep pressure on the Viet Cong and disrupt his guerrilla activities.

AIR ASSAULT

The locale is a remote jungle area, secret headquarters and hideout for a large force of Communist guerrillas. Some miles from the guerrilla headquarters is their sizable and carefully camouflaged supply center.

Unknown to the guerrillas, a U.S. Army surveillance aircraft has located both the headquarters and the supply center. The friendly forces are now about to make full use of this intelligence information.

The stillness of the jungle is suddenly shattered by the sounds of approaching helicopters, flying just above the treetops. Caught by surprise in their hidden rest area, the guerrillas begin to seek even more concealment.

They hear machineguns and air-to-ground rockets firing and realize that the armed helicopters are laying down suppressive fires. This fact tells them that fresh, ready-to-fight troops soon will be coming to earth all around their position.

They realize that the thing all guerrillas fear—encirclement—is about to occur.

The suppressive fires increase as the troop-carrying helicopters descend and quickly discharge their battle-ready infantrymen. As the troops move out toward their preplanned objectives, the armed helicopters follow them with more suppressive fire.

The transport helicopters move back to their base for additional troops and supplies. In a few hours the surrounded guerrilla headquarters is taken.

But the operation is not yet complete. Now the airmobile force turns its attention to the next objective—the supply center. By tortuous jungle trail it would be many hours away; by helicopter only minutes.

According to plan, the transport helicopters return to pick up most of the infantrymen, leaving a contingent to guard the captive guerrillas.

Although their headquarters has flashed them a warning to expect an attack, the guerrillas manning the supply center know that they cannot defend the installation against such odds. They have only one choice—disappear deeper into the jungle carrying what few supplies they can. When the airmobile elements arrive over the position, suppressive fires prove to be unneeded. The troops land unopposed and soon the large supply dump is in flames.

As the final phase of this imaginary, but entirely realistic, airmobile operation, troop-carrying helicopters return to the former guerrilla hideout, pick up the guard contingent and their captives, and return to base.

CHARGER OPERATIONS

Administrative helicopter support for the brigade is the responsibility of the Charger aviation section. With a total of seven helicopters, these Chargers fly the missions of command and control for the commanding general, battalion commanders and staff officers, transport of passengers, and courier runs.

Often in the past, missions flown by these Charger pilots have turned out to be far from "milk runs." Nearly every ship has been hit at least once by enemy ground fire. "Charger 10 Thousand," the command and control ship of the brigade commander, has been hit on three occasions, once with the pilot-general at its controls. But due to the skill and abilities of the pilots concerned, friendly casualties have amounted to only three wounded.

One such wounded was the former aviation officer of the brigade, Major Eric J. Leach. He has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for an earlier action in which he helped a force of Vietnamese CIDG (Civilian Irregular Defense Group) troops overcome a vicious Viet Cong attack. Twice during the heavy firefight, the major voluntarily flew his ship into the battle area to resupply the CIDG troops with ammunition and evacuate their wounded.

Then there is the story of First Lieutenant Robert Crawford. Shortly after taking off from the brigade base camp in his little OH-23 helicopter, a sniper's bullet ripped into the under side of the chopper and through his right foot. But Crawford disappointed the enemy gunner. He was still able to fly the ship, though shakily, and made a safe landing at the 45th Surgical Hospital helicopter pad, located a short distance from where he was hit.

Yankee ingenuity and daring showed in another experience when Crawford and Warrant Officer Fred Startz literally cut through triple-canopied jungle with their ship to evacuate a wounded Vietnamese Marine. While the Marines waited anxiously in a small clearing, the chopper with Crawford and Startz aboard eased its way down. The blast from the rotor blades forced the trees apart, allowing the big Huey helicopter to hover above the ground low enough so that the wounded Marine could be put aboard. But now without the full blast of the blades, the trees had closed in about the chopper. The only way for the ship to ascend was for it to cut its way up. It did. After a 30-minute flight, the wounded Marine was safe at the 45th Surgical Hospital. When Startz and Crawford looked at their aircraft they saw the tattered wreck of its blades. It was a wonder the ship was able to fly at all.

ARTILLERY SUPPORT

Since arriving in Vietnam in August 1966, the Flying Red Horsemen of the brigade's 3d Battalion, 82d Artillery, have combined with attached artillery units to fire over 115,000 rounds in support of Charger operations.

The brigade's organic artillery battalion consists of three firing batteries and one administrative battery. Each of the firing batteries is armed with six 105 mm howitzers capable of hurling a projectile over seven miles.

The brigade's artillery was supplemented by 155 mm and 8" howitzers and 175 mm guns from artillery units which were periodically attached to the brigade during combat operations. The combination of organic and attached artillery gave the brigade a devastating arsenal capable of performing a diversity of missions.

Offensively, artillery was used to soften up areas in front of infantry elements advancing on search-and-destroy operations; to "saturate" landing zones prior to air assaults by the infantry; and to create diversions for airmobile assaults by false preparations fired on landing zones adjacent to the ones actually used.

Defensively, artillery was called on to lay down suppressive fires during the extraction phase of airmobile operations; for harassment and interdiction (H&I) fires on likely enemy positions, ambush sites or troop concentrations; and to lay down defensive concentrations around forward bases.

Many times artillery was called upon to fire high air bursts of white phosphorous to assist patrols navigating through dense jungle or at night, when map inspection was not practical.

Operation JUNCTION CITY saw the most extensive use of brigade artillery. When the massive operation began, the organic and attached artillery units were required to move by motor vehicle and Chinook helicopter, through the air and overland on trails, changing fire support bases to keep up with the advancing infantry. The artillery units were resupplied primarily by air drops from Air Force C-130 transports. Ammunition, for the first time, was parachuted to the forward positions where there were no secure roads.

Also during JUNCTION CITY, the brigade artillery developed a new concept for defending forward fire support bases. Artillery batteries, usually two, placed their guns in a horseshoe formation at each end of the perimeter, with two companies of infantry protecting the flanks and maintaining outposts forward of each battery. The infantry and artillery command posts were co-located within this perimeter, which allowed maximum use of the anti-personnel round against mass attacks. By using this technique it was possible to maintain a full company outside the perimeter as a reaction force.

For the Flying Red Horsemen, the Second Year has been a good one. Invaluable experience was gained in countless combat fire missions and successes mounted with the months.

The eyes of the Artillery are the men of the forward observer teams. Normally comprised of three men—a forward observer, a recon sergeant, and a radio-telephone operator—these teams accompany the infantry into battle with the mission of calling in and adjusting artillery fire on the enemy.

Men like First Lieutenant William D. Waller, a forward observer, and PFC John G. Scanlan, a radio-telephone operator, were typical of the caliber of men assigned to these teams.

Waller was with a platoon of the 4/31 Inf when it came under fire by an enemy ambush. Waller and several other men in the lead element became casualties in the initial burst of fire.

Despite his head wound, Waller elected to remain behind to call in artillery fire on the enemy when his platoon was ordered to withdraw to better defensive positions. Only after all the wounded had been evacuated, and the platoon safely established in its new position, did Waller himself withdraw. As a climax, he called in air strikes on the enemy.

Like Waller, Scanlan was caught in an enemy ambush while accompanying 2/1 Inf. The initial enemy machine gun burst killed the company commander, and wounded Scanlan in the eye.

Refusing to be evacuated, he remained at his post relaying instructions from his forward observer to the artillery unit in support. When it was time for him to withdraw, he noticed a group of men retrieving the body of the dead company commander. Instinctively, he assisted the men in bringing back the officer, while still operating his radio.

AIR SUPPORT

Much of the success of brigade operations can be attributed to the devastating effects of the forces that support it. One of these is the U.S. 7th Air Force. Few infantrymen have not experienced the moments of sheer joy and relief when Air Force jets came screaming to their aid like the Calvary of old.

Besides close ground support, the Air Force assists the infantry in such areas as transportation of supplies, equipment and personnel, and in aerial reconnaissance.

The 196th Brigade's air support is directed by an Air Force Tactical Air Control Party (TACP), which is attached to the brigade and headed by Major Robert H. Laurine. Comprised of five pilots who act as Forward Air Controllers (FAC), and eight enlisted men, the TACP's potent weapon is the unarmed OI-E "Bird Dog" aircraft. Daily, "Bird Dogs" skim over the ground at low altitude in search of enemy activity. Many an enemy gunner have given in to the temptation of firing at the small aircraft, only to see the plane's big brothers—armed fighters waiting for just this opportunity from high above—come swooping in on them.

Once the enemy is sighted, or a request is received from ground troops engaged with the enemy, the FACs mark the area with colored smoke rockets, then call in and direct armed fighters for the attack. On many occasions ground troops have received air support in less than ten minutes.

During the first few days of February, at the start of "Operation Gadsden," three FACs of the brigade's TACP—Captains David C. Halverson, Robert L. Staib, and First Lieutenant James P. Burke—disregarded heavy enemy ground fire to assist friendly ground troops locked in battle with the VC. As a result, 60 Viet Cong were killed by Air Power alone.

Less than a month later, Captain Halverson was to again prove the worth of Air Power. Flying along the Cambodian border, he observed a company of Viet Cong deployed east of the boundary. Immediately he drew fire from the enemy. Jet fighters were called in and 50 of the enemy fired no more.

The war's largest Allied offensive—Operation JUNCTION CITY—saw the brigade score another Vietnam first when it was resupplied by airdrops from giant C-130 Hercules aircraft deep in jungles along the Cambodian border. Captain Robert Watson, tactical airlift officer, sometimes under hazardous conditions and working over the heartland of the enemy, arranged and coordinated the aerial resupply of more than 800 tons of cargo.

In Operation GADSDEN, the brigade for the first time, used air strikes to prep the area where a bridge was to be emplaced. Tactical bombing of this served not only to destroy bunkers and trenches near the crossing, but also to burn the heavy elephant grass and bamboo at the approaches to the site.

RECONNAISSANCE

The mission of the Brigade, as it is with all infantry units, is to "Find, Fix, and Finish" the enemy forces. Helping the Brigade to "find and fix" the enemy are six subordinate or attached units—the 569th Military Intelligence Detachment; Troop F, 17th Cavalry; the 408th Radio Research Detachment, the Long Range Reconnaissance Patrol; the 48th Infantry Platoon (Scout Dog); and the U.S. Air Force Tactical Air Control Party (TACP).

Though each of these units has a separate and distinct mission, their combined resources and services provide the infantryman with the knowledge he requires of the enemy to perform the last ingredient of his mission—"finishing" the enemy.

Daily, Air Force forward air controllers take to the skies in search of enemy activity. On the ground, a small group of camouflaged soldiers of the Long Range Reconnaissance Patrol may be observing Viet Cong on a crossroad deep in enemy territory.

Not far away, scout dogs of the 48th Infantry Platoon may be at the point element of an infantry unit on a search and destroy mission. Their keen sense of smell, sight, and hearing always ready to alert the infantrymen of hidden Viet Cong or his booby traps.

Elsewhere, cavalrymen of Troop F may be clearing a road of mines, or investigating fresh intelligence on the VC. All of these information, or intelligence as it is called in the military, meanwhile, are being collected sorted, categorized and posted for immediate or future use by the 569th military intelligence personnel at Brigade headquarters.

It is through the work of these men that the Brigade has brought, and will continue to bring, "smoke" on the enemy.

THE ENEMY

Generally, there are three different types of enemy forces. These may be classified as local forces, provincial forces, and main force units.

Local force companies are those which are recruited or conscripted from the local population for service in the same general area in which they live. These units are often part time soldiers who are active for the VC at night and pursue their overt livelihood at other times. They are normally equipped with small arms, light machine guns, and 60 mm mortars. The weapons are often old, and in many instances, are weapons which they have captured.

The uniforms of these units are non-standard with the traditional black pajamas being most prevalent. The relatively poor armament and unmilitary appearance of these units, however, do not mean that the men are poor fighters or that they lack dedication.

As guerrillas, they are effective at establishing and executing ambushes, serving as reconnaissance for other more sophisticated VC units, conducting raids, kidnappings and assassinations, and in general engaging in harassment operations against larger and more heavily armed friendly units. They seldom remain in any one place for more than 48 hours, and their ability to move undetected from place to place is well established.

The provincial forces are the next higher echelon of the enemy forces. Personnel in these units are recruited directly into the provincial forces, or come from personnel who have served with local force units and who have proven themselves to be good fighters, good leaders, and most important, as dedicated Communists. The cadre for these units are often from North Vietnamese Army units or from VC main force units. The provincial units operate under the direction of the VC political committee. The mission of the provincial units is the attack of outposts using tactics which involve fire and maneuver. They also augment main force units which operate in the area. The provincial units are better equipped, better armed, and generally have achieved a higher state of training than the local force units. They are full time soldiers for the most part.

The highest echelon of the enemy forces is the main force unit or what is also referred to as hardcore units. These units represent the highest state to which the Viet Cong has thus far progressed in forming a real Army.

It consists of infantry, and artillery units, supported by signal, engineer, and ordnance troops. The units are formed into infantry divisions normally consisting of three regiments, and the regiments in turn consisting of three battalions. The artillery to support these divisions is not an integral part of the division, but rather a separate unit which is given the mission of supporting the infantry.

The largest known artillery unit is the artillery regiment consisting of a varying number of artillery battalions equipped with different types of weapons. While the equipment of these units is seldom new, it is still equipment which is in excellent condition. Much of it consists of equipment of Russian or Chinese manufacture. The infantry units are equipped with 60 mm and 82 mm mortars and 57 mm or 75 mm recoilless rifles. The 7.62 mm machine gun appears to be the standard light machine gun, and a copy of the Soviet 12.7 mm serves as the heavy support machine gun. The main force units possess a limited number of Soviet-made 120 mm mortars. These weapons were encountered by the Brigade just prior to its leaving Tay Ninh.

The artillery units are also reported to be equipped with 75 mm pack howitzers and there have been scattered reports of some 105 mm howitzers. There are also 140 mm rockets in the VC arsenal.

CHIEU HOI

One of the more ambitious programs of the Vietnamese government to win back the people who are fighting it is its "Chieu Hoi" or "Open Arms" program. Through Chieu Hoi the government offers the hand of friendship and a new beginning in life to any VC or NVA members. The program is directed at communist-infested areas.

"Hoi Chanh" is the name given individual returnees, those who voluntarily return to government control after actively supporting the VC.

Many things are offered the Hoi Chanh to come to the side of the rightful government. First, and most important, the government promises humane treatment to any VC—military or civilian—or to any NVA soldier who will voluntarily return. The Hoi Chanh is not a prisoner of war, not a prisoner of any kind.

Second, the Hoi Chanh is given a reward for any weapons he turns in. The rewards may range anywhere from 800 piasters (a little more than six dollars, American) to 20,000. Third, the Hoi Chanh is given a new life. The government forgives him for his activities against it. While at a Chieu Hoi Center, he receives food, clothing, medical care and a daily allowance of money.

He may also receive vocational training, and may make a choice of what he will do after his stay at the center.

The program has shown it really works. Since its inception in 1963 more than 58,000 VC and 240 NVA have defected.

The results of the program include far more than just numbers of people. With these people came some of the best information that the Free World Forces can get on the VC and their activities.

LOGISTICAL SUPPORT

It has been said that for every rifleman, there are five support-type soldiers. This is justifiably so. Today's fast-moving, hard-hitting Army requires many men to support it.

As an illustration, these five support men might best be described by some of the services the Army requires—administration, supply, transportation, maintenance, and medical.

As a separate Army unit, the 196th Light Brigade has all of these services organic to it, plus one more—engineer. These are found in the brigade's 8th Support Battalion, and the 175th Engineer Company (Combat).

8th Support, as it is more commonly known, is a unique organization similar to a Support Command of a division. Its three companies provide the bulk of the support for the brigade. Company A is the administration Company, Company B handles supply and maintenance, and Company C provides the medical services.

Although a "rear" type unit, 8th Support has seen its share of enemy fire. During the months of November and January, the battalion received several casualties as a result of mortar attacks on the brigade's base camp at Tay Ninh. These attacks came at a time when the brigade was establishing itself in its new home.

The attacks were vicious, and men who had been under fire for the first time came face to face with the reality of combat. Many of the men showed calm and courage despite the attack as they helped the wounded, and offered words of direction and encouragement.

SUPPLY AND MAINTENANCE

During the first few months at the Tay Ninh base camp, the brigade's Company B, 8th Support Battalion, performed virtually all supply and maintenance functions.

This was made possible by the company's unique organizational structure. It consisted of a maintenance platoon, a transportation platoon, and a supply platoon.

The maintenance platoon supported the 196th and many non-brigade units until the arrival of the 548th Light Equipment Company in February. Among the many items repaired by the platoon were wheeled vehicles, artillery pieces, small arms weapons, communications and engineer equipment, and office machines.

Among the supply platoon's functions were the handling of the brigade's food, ammunition and POL (Petroleum, Oil, and Lubricant) needs. It also operated a central clothing issue point in base camp. The transportation platoon hauled nearly everything the brigade required, from passengers to supplies to equipment. During field operations, the company would operate a forward logistical operations center.

Test-firing a repaired pistol

COMMUNICATIONS

"Shoot, Scoot, and Communicate," are the by words of today's modern Army. The brigade showed it could shoot and scoot, but it needed additional support in communications.

Prior to the arrival of the brigade's advance party at Tay Ninh, communications facilities at the base camp were being handled by the 25th Infantry Division, and a platoon from the 595th Signal Company, 86th Signal Battalion.

The 25th Division installed and made operational VHF (Very High Frequency) systems, the message center, switchboard, and radio-teletype facilities. The 595th's mission was that of providing communications for the base camp and the Tay Ninh area.

The brigade's own communications capability was limited to battalion commo platoons. It had no VHF communications until the arrival and attachment of the 156th Signal Platoon.

Responsible for forward area communications, the platoon on one combat operation showed itself to be as airmobile as the infantrymen it supported. Its heavy communications equipment was made compact enough to fit into the beds of 3/4-ton trucks and transported to helicopter pick up points. There, they were airlifted to the battle area by giant Chinook helicopters. Few short hours later, the communications facilities were made operational.

The mission of the 595th Signal was later assumed by a provisional platoon from Company B, 36th Signal Battalion.

Signal personnel work fast and efficiently to provide the brigade vital communications. At left, a soldier readies an antenna for the forward command post of brigade headquarters.

"Liberator, sir?"

ENGINEER

Largely through the efforts of the Brigade's 175th Engineer Company and elements of the 588th and 65th Engineer Battalions, men of the Brigade were able to enjoy a life of relative comfort in base camp.

By the time the Brigade departed for Chu Lai, the base camp was already sporting a massive logistical complex, and a large community center which boasted a post exchange, post office, outdoor theater, and chapel.

Many days and nights of concerted effort were required of the engineers to forge the new home. Initially, the men found themselves working in shifts to meet the basic need for adequate roads and essential buildings.

In all, the Second Year saw the 175th Engineers performing a variety of missions. Construction was but one. Another was its participation in civic action projects. Among them the construction of roads outside base camp, the restoration of a bridge demolished by the Viet Cong, and the raising of a Vietnamese ferry which had sunk mid-stream.

Assisting the Infantry in combat operations, however, was the company's primary mission. An engineer squad was attached to each Infantry battalion. Its job was to perform demolition duties, and to disarm enemy mines and booby-traps.

A major project performed by the engineers in combat was the emplacement of a light tactical bridge in Operation GADSDEN, which helped lead to the success of the operation.

MEDICAL SERVICES

Until the brigade's re-deployment to Chu Lai primary medical services were provided by Company C (Medical), 8th Support Battalion, the 47th Helicopter Ambulance Detachment, and the 45th Surgical Hospital (MUST).

Working as a team, these facilities provided brigadesmen, and soldiers of non-brigade units in the Tay Ninh area, fast and complete medical attention.

When a soldier became wounded or injured in the field, a call would be placed from his unit to the brigade's tactical operations center. "Dust-off" radio, operated by the 8th Support Battalion, would then be notified, and a helicopter from the 47th Ambulance Detachment would lift off from the 45th Surgical Hospital helicopter pad at the brigade base camp, and speed to its mission of mercy. All of this occurring in a matter of minutes.

If the casualty were a serious one, he would be taken directly to the 45th Surgical Hospital. If he were less seriously injured, he would be taken to Company C, 8th Support, located adjacent to the 45th.

The speed with which a serious casualty is evacuated to a medical facility has been a major factor in reducing the number of combat fatalities. The helicopter has proven its worth in this area, as it has in other areas of combat support. Often, resupply and troop-carrying helicopters have assisted helicopter ambulances in ferrying the wounded soldiers. The key is rapid evacuation.

The 45th Surgical Hospital (MUST) is the Army's newest and most unique medical facility, and is considered a breakthrough in the field of medical service. All of its equipment is compact enough to be transported in trucks or helicopters. The equipment is stored in expandables, which when expanded, serve as wards, operating rooms, administrative offices, and laboratories. It is a complete hospital, stocked with the latest medical equipment. It takes mere hours to set up, as compared to other more conventional hospitals which may require months to be made operational. The system also features complete environmental control, with air-conditioning or heating on demand, controlled by a central source.

Company C, 8th Support, is also capable of independent medical support. Its organization is such that it can perform surgical and dental procedures, conduct laboratory tests, and has a capacity of handling up to 120 bed patients. It also treats Vietnamese civilians during MEDCAP (Medical Civic Action Program) operations to various villages. Its mission in Tay Ninh was to treat less seriously injured soldiers, and to handle the overflow of patients at the 45th Surgical Hospital.

THE PEOPLE

Vietnam, North and South, flanks the eastern coast of the southeast Asian peninsula jutting into the South China Sea. Long and narrow, it curves down in a rough S-shape for 1,100 miles from Communist China in the north, pinches at the waist to less than 50 miles, and broadens southwestward into the Gulf of Siam.

Vietnam shares its western border with Laos and Cambodia, and with these two nations was known as French Indo-China for about a century before World War II.

The Annamite mountain chain stretches nearly the length of Vietnam, linking the country's two large delta regions—those of the Red River in the far north and the Mekong River in the extreme south. Land area totals 127,000 square miles.

In this tropical and predominantly agricultural country, an estimated 80 percent of the 31 million people are farmers. They are concentrated in the deltas and are scattered in villages and hamlets of the lowland coastal areas.

Rice is the major food crop. Rubber is an important export product in the lightly industrialized, mineral deficient south. The less fertile north has coal and ores for its nascent industrial base. Fishing is of great importance.

A short, handsome, fine-boned people, at least 85 percent of the population are ethnically Vietnamese, called Annamese in earlier centuries. The largest minority is Chinese, perhaps numbering one million, mostly in the south.

There are some three million indigenous peoples, collectively called "Montagnards" (mountaineers) by the French, who live in the semi-isolation of the highlands. In the lowlands live several hundred thousand people of the same stock as the majority of people in neighboring Cambodia.

Buddhism, infused with Confucianist precepts, is the dominant religious faith of the country. An estimated two million are Roman Catholics.

Politically, there are two Vietnams, divided into almost equal parts at the 17th terrestrial latitude by the international conference at Geneva in 1954, marking the end of a long period of French rule in Indo-China.

In the north is the Democratic Republic of Vietnam (DRVN) or Communist North Vietnam, with some 17 million people. Hanoi is the capital. The Republic of Vietnam or South Vietnam has over 15 million people. Saigon is the capital.

Cao Dai Temple, Tay Ninh

Thousands of soldiers and civilians have been killed in South Vietnam since the mid-1950's. The government of South Vietnam says they are victims of North Vietnam's "war of subversion" against it. North Vietnam says the fighting is a "people's war" to overthrow an unpopular government."

This much is immediately clear: the Vietnamese conflict is a threat to world peace. It is also said that because of the nature of the conflict, there could be another "Vietnam" tomorrow, elsewhere in Asia, or in the Middle East, Africa, or Latin America.

CIVIC ACTION

Children of the 2/1 Inf-sponsored Co Nhi Vien Orphanage

CIVIC ACTION

When the Brigade first arrived in Tay Ninh, its civic action activities were primarily directed toward the establishment of rapport and coordination with local civilian and military authorities.

Meetings with MACV advisors in the area provided the foundation for operating procedures for future CA operations. In addition, under the sponsorship of the 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division, the CA officers of the battalions and the brigade observed and operated with their respective hosts learning methods of CA operations.

September saw the arrival of the 1st Philippine Civic Action Group, Vietnam (1st PHILCAGV), to Tay Ninh. To avoid duplication of CA efforts between PHILCAG and the Brigade, coordination was made with the Province Chief to establish areas of responsibility. September also saw the brigade CA program begin in earnest. This included English classes for the Vietnamese by two brigadesmen, and five MEDCAPs (medical civic action program) which treated some 1,160 persons. Perhaps the highlight to this was one battalion's participation in the Vietnamese mid-autumn festival at Cao Xa II and District headquarters.

By the end of October the brigade's CA program had been firmly established. Brigade units became more CA conscious in their daily operations, resulting in a favorable impact upon the Vietnamese population. It was evident the people of Tay Ninh were benefitting from the Brigade's assistance. Schools were going up, as were a Chieu Hoi Center and a market place. The English classes were augmented with an art class, and food was donated to the district refugee center.

Most effective of all civic action projects, perhaps, were the MEDCAPs conducted by doctors at the battalion level. Thousands of patients were treated for illnesses ranging from pneumonia to tuberculosis. There were also numerous surgical and dental procedures. At first the people were cautious of the Americans, but soon found the Americans were there to help rather than hurt. The children also learned to enjoy MEDCAPs, as the Americans always seemed to bring "chop-chop" for them.

In 'community relations, the Brigade joined with the hamlet of Suoi Cao to celebrate the latter's victory over a seven-hour attack by the VC. During Thanksgiving and Christmas, school children from surrounding hamlets were treated to holiday meals in unit mess halls.

Civic action as a major participant in Revolutionary Development was proven during Operation CEDAR FALLS. Rapport with the population in unpacified areas was gained by aiding the villagers with medical attention and with the distribution of much needed commodities. Some 1,430 patients were treated while aid was also given to more than 400 refugee families in resettlement moves.

CHARGER ACADEMY ... First Stop For All Newcomers

For the new soldiers reporting to the 196th Light Infantry Brigade, training comes before combat. Not only is this true for the relative newcomers to the Army, but for the old timers as well.

The mission of seasoning the replacements in skills and knowledge required in the combat zone is that of the brigade's Charger Academy. Presented by a cadre of two officers and six non-commissioned officers, all of whom have seen combat with line units, the six-day course covers various aspects of conventional and unconventional warfare.

The basic theory behind the course is to provide the new arrival with the experience factor from experienced soldiers prior to actual combat.

Although many of the subjects taught are not new to the men, each is tailored specifically to their needs while in Vietnam, and gives the soldier the latest methods of "doing" from actual experience.

All Vietnam aren't Viet Cong. Thus, during instruction on Rules of Engagement, methods and techniques used to identify VC or suspected VC are learned. The soldier also learns about the Army of Republic of Vietnam soldier, with whom he may find himself on combat operations. He is also briefed on the purpose of civic action, so he learns local customs and habits and respect for the traditions of the Vietnamese people.

The bulk of the six-day course stresses those things the replacement must know to survive in combat. He learns how to call in and adjust artillery fire, and of weapons and booby traps employed by the enemy. He also learns how to use all the weapons found in his unit.

Through dense jungle the replacement tackles the Jungle Reaction Course. Here, he learns to engage and fire at concealed targets which test both his alertness and reflexes. The marksmanship training he received earlier has already begun to pay off.

To get the feel and initial experience of combat operations, his last night at the Academy is spent with an experienced unit on operation. Putting into practice his freshly acquired skills with experienced combat buddies lessens the initial strain of the sights and sounds of battle. At the end of the sixth day the Charger Academy becomes to him not only another alma mater, but one that has provided the "most valuable block of training received anywhere in preparation for combat in Vietnam."

The Charger Academy also presents classes for snipers. Here, selected volunteers are taught the use of the sniper weapon, methods of engaging a target, concealment, and ways of getting into position.

POST EXCHANGE

On 29 Aug 1966, one officer and three enlisted men were assigned the task of organizing, establishing and operating a post exchange for the Brigade. Since that day, purchases by the "Chargers" have totaled over $675,000.

Nine temporary annex stores were originally opened, located at the major units in the Tay Ninh base camp, while plans were drawn and preparations made for a large main PX to serve the entire brigade. What had once been a swampy rice paddy was filled with a laterite foundation for the 100-foot long main building. Construction proceeded in record time and on 26 Nov the structure was completed.

Fixtures and showcases were installed and the shelves were stocked with food, clothes, cameras, tape recorders, and other items which had previously been available only at Cu

Chi or Saigon. Opening day, 15 Dec, was observed by some 1,500 Chargers enthusiastically anticipating the unveiling of their "own" PX. Entering the store, they were greeted by a cheerful decor and shelf after shelf stacked high with "luxury" items. Sales on the first day totaled over $20,000.

Since the grand opening of the main store, the PX has expanded its operations to include a Class VI store, barber shop, tailor, laundry, automobile and jewelry concessions, and a mobile PX which is brought by truck or airlift to brigadesmen in the forward areas when operational requirements permit.

As the PX services grew, so did the staff, which by May, totalled two officers and 36 enlisted men. A team from the PX accompanied the brigade on its move to Chu Lai, while the bulk of the staff continued to operate and improve the facility at Tay Ninh.

The chaplain in a combat zone is a takeoff from the circuit riding pastor of the frontier days.

His chapel is the great outdoors. His congregation is spread from one area of combat operations to another.

Unarmed, he follows the infantry on its many combat patrols. Always, he is ready to comfort a wounded soldier, or offer last rites to a fallen comrade. His presence offers the kind of spiritual and moral support a soldier seeks in his time of need.

In base camp, the chaplain makes troop and hospital visits, gives counsel, provides religious instructions, and conducts religious rites.

Charger Memorial Chapel

Under the leadership of Chaplain (Lieutenant Colonel) John Russell, brigade chaplain, the brigade's five chaplains provide Protestant and Catholic services. Jewish services are provided upon the availability of Rabbis, or by laymen.

In December, two days before Christmas, the brigade's "Charger" Memorial Chapel was completed. Located in base camp, its beauty lay in its simplicity and functionality of design. Christmas and Easter services were conducted in the brigade chapel and at the brigade's Tay Ninh Rice Bowl, an outdoor theater.

POSTAL SERVICES

Mail call is the lifeblood of the soldier. Never a day goes by without the unit mail clerk being asked the familiar question, "Any mail today?"

The soldier can live on c-rations, sweat in the sun, and charge an enemy bunker, but when his mail is delayed or not received, a morale problem occurs which can crush him worse than any enemy could.

Mail's greatest value to the soldier is its means of keeping him in touch with his loved ones at home. Or he may use it to keep up with his payments, or even buy a item not available through the post exchange.

When the brigade arrived in Tay Ninh, the postal section's only asset was a medium-size general purpose tent. Rains made the dirt floor miserable and the arrival of the hot season made working conditions almost unbearable.

In November, during the Christmas rush, the postal section received an early Yule gift in the form of a 20 by 96-foot quonset hut. It was a blessing as the section was busy processing more than 20,000 pounds of Christmas mail. Since its first day of operation, the postal section has handled 1,312 tons of mail and sold nearly three million dollars worth of money orders.

MILITARY POLICE

Military police activities in the brigade were performed by the brigade's own military police platoon and the attached 544th MP Platoon.

Under the direction of Major Lincoln Brigham, brigade provost marshal, these platoons commanded by First Lieutenants Arthur Gulden and George Taylor performed a wide variety of missions.

They patrolled the base camp and surrounding villages for law and order among American military personnel. They scrutinized traffic, manned traffic control points, and escorted military convoys.

They provided security for the commanding general and the brigade's tactical operations center. When the brigade headquarters moved to the Provost Marshal briefs his men . . .

. . . then move out to search a village field from Tay Ninh, they also moved.

Searching and processing Vietnamese workers into the base camp were also MP responsibilities. They exercised custody, control and processing of detainees, and operated the brigade Prisoner of War complex.

The MPs showed they could fight as infantry as well. On one operation, the 544th MP Platoon was attached to the 4/31 Inf on a search and destroy mission on Nui Ba Mountain. The platoon's 90 mm recoilless rifles proved effective in supporting the infantry's advance on dug-in positions.

At Chu Lai, the MPs along with Vietnamese National police conducted their own brand of "search and clear" operation, in searching for the VC.

To Brigadesmen who made the supreme sacrifice for the cause of freedom, this book is dedicated

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

In the space of a few pages, we have attempted to present a picture of the 196th Light Infantry Brigade during its "Second Year." A year which brought it from a combat ready status in the states, to deployment and actual combat in the Republic of Vietnam. The men who comprised the Army's first Light Infantry Brigade during this period, feel justifiably proud of their many accomplishments. Their unselfish devotion in the fight for freedom has indeed served to carve a proud new chapter in the annals of military history.

We wish to thank the many people who have had a part in the making of this book. In particular, the reporter-photographers of the Brigade Information Office—Sp4 Robert Brown, Sp4 Rusty Melton, PFC Dennis Shutz, PFC Chris Perales, PFC Jack Mitchell, PFC Bill Stroupe, and PFC William Tyler—whose work form the backbone of this book.

We also wish to thank the fine people of the Dai Nippon Printing Company. In particular, Mr. Hachirou Aida and Mr. Masanori Kawamoto whose professional skills were invaluable in the publication of this book.

Ambrosio Sarmiento Jr.
